STATE BOARD BLAMES B. R. T. AND CITY, TOO

Only Part of Its Traffic Recommendations Are Adopted in Brooklyn.

In a report on passenger transportation conditions in Brooklyn, issued this afternoon by the State Railroad Commission, the city authorities are sharply blamed for neglect to do their part toward bettering traffic conditions across the bridge.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company is criticised severely for its failure to make certain improvements to its lines recommended by the Commission on Feb. 9, 1906, and credit is given for the company's compliance with other recommendations.

The report says that the company has complied with eight specific recommendations for bettering the service on its elevated lines, resulting in an increase of 7,184 car miles daily, and has complied with nineteen recommendations for improving the service on its surface lines, increasing its schedules so that 1,320 cars were operated on the surface lines in January, 1906, against 1,220 in January, 1905, and 201 double truck cars, each seating forty-two, were put in service in place of 101 single truck cars seating only thirty. At the same time ninety-two cars were added to the elevated equipment.

No New Tunnels Yet.

In dealing with the city's responsibility for the congestion of the rush hours, the Commission cites its recommendations of a year ago, and says: "No contracts have as yet been executed for any additional tunnels under the East River."

"No action has been taken by the local authorities to bring about the construction of an elevated structure connecting the Brooklyn and Williamsburg bridges."

"No work on erecting the Manhattan bridge has been done."

"No change in the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn bridge, which would relieve present conditions, has been made."

"The city has not constructed loops and shelter stations at the Manhattan terminal of the Williamsburg Bridge."

"The city has not extended Flatbush avenue to provide a terminal artery through the business portion of Brooklyn to the Brooklyn Bridge."

"The bridge force for regulating traffic and expediting cars has not been increased, but has been reduced."

The Commission's recommendations of a year ago for the improvement of Brooklyn's elevated system are recited with these comments:

Haven't Built Third Track.

"The Brooklyn Heights Railroad has not complied with this Board's recommendation that an additional track be constructed on all its elevated lines."

"It has complied with the recommendation to lengthen its platforms, except on the Broadway line from the ferry to East New York and on the Ridgewood line from Vanderbilt and Knickerbocker avenues."

"It has not complied with the recommendation that all cars be operated only at night."

"The Commission reports that the company is complying with the recommendations for shelter stations, destination signs and the substitution of forty-eight passenger single-track cars."

"The B. R. T. has ordered 100 additional elevated cars and 100 more surface cars, which are to be delivered this month, and has promised to order 350 more surface cars for delivery in the fall, which the Commission says will give the company all the cars that it can operate with its present track facilities."

"The report concludes with five specific recommendations for the improvement of the elevated system, and twelve specific recommendations for increased service on the Brooklyn surface lines."

Can't Help Rush Hours.

"The Board finds that the maximum number of surface cars run over the Brooklyn Bridge in the rush hour varies from 20, the limit set in January, 1904, was 2,127.22, an increase of 7,184.67 over 1903."

"The Board of Railroad Commissioners has been increased from three to five it has been able to give more attention to the conditions in New York City and is going into the matter thoroughly."
